

Most of Austin is within a one-mile radius of parkland. The PARD Bond Election recommendation includes funding to fill the gaps in park service. It is expected that the infill parks may be smaller Pocket Parks.

A Pocket Park is a new category of park in Austin. The most recent examples are Chestnut Park and the former Grooms Street electric substation. A Pocket Park could be composed of a few housing lots to an acre in size.